FL-002: THE LIQUIDITY GRAB (ASIA RANGE STOP-HUNT REVERSAL)

What this setup is

The Liquidity Grab is a reversal setup that occurs when price briefly breaks the Asia range, grabs liquidity (stops), and then fails to continue, leading to a move in the opposite direction through UK.

This setup relies on trap behaviour, not breakouts.

- Break below Asia Low → look for reversal up
- Break above Asia High → look for reversal down

WHEN YOU'RE ALLOWED TO EVEN LOOK FOR IT (DAY FILTER)

This setup uses the same Asia qualification rules as the other Asia → UK strategies.

✅ Rule 1: Asia range must be under 2%

- Measure the Asia High to Asia Low
- < 2% = acceptable
- > 2% = no trade day

✅ Rule 2: Asia must be consolidation

You want:

- sideways behaviour
- multiple touches of high and low
- no clean directional trend

If Asia trends, liquidity grabs are less reliable.

WHERE AND WHEN IT USUALLY APPEARS

The Liquidity Grab most commonly forms:

- in the last hour of Asia
- during the UK Gap

- or within the first 30–60 minutes of UK

You typically have a narrow window to act.
This is not a slow, patient setup.

WHAT QUALIFIES AS A LIQUIDITY GRAB

A valid liquidity grab has all of the following:

- A candle breaks the Asia High or Low
- That break does not hold
- The candle shows:
  - a large wick
  - a small body
- There is often a volume spike compared to surrounding candles
- Price closes back inside the Asia range or fails to continue in the breakout direction

This is the market running stops, not starting a trend.

WHAT IT IS NOT

This setup is not:

- a clean breakout
- a continuation move
- a full-bodied close that holds outside the range
- a structure break that leads to follow-through

If price breaks and accepts outside the range, this is no longer a Liquidity Grab.

THE TRIGGER LOGIC

Once the stop-hunt candle closes:

- You are looking for immediate reaction

- Entry happens within the next 15 x one-minute candles
- If you wait for the next full 15-minute candle to close and it's already moving → you are late

This setup rewards decisiveness, not perfection.

LOWER TIMEFRAME BEHAVIOUR (OPTIONAL BUT COMMON)

Many traders drop to the 1-minute timeframe to fine-tune entry:

- If the next 1-minute candle immediately moves away → market entry is often required
- If price briefly retraces, you may get a slightly better entry
- You generally have no more than ~14 minutes after the stop-hunt candle closes

If momentum goes without you – that's fine.
Missing this trade is better than chasing it.

STOP LOSS PLACEMENT

Your stop goes:

- beyond the wick of the liquidity grab candle
- on the opposite side of the stop hunt

This setup is invalid if price returns and runs that liquidity again.

TARGETING LOGIC

Common targets include:

- the opposite side of the Asia range
- a recent high or low from the last 1–2 sessions
- a nearby EMA (often the 200)

This setup often delivers ~2R.
Occasionally more, but that's not the expectation.

MANDATORY EXIT RULE

Regardless of outcome:

✅ You do not hold this trade into the last hour of UK.
You want to be flat before 8:00am New York time.

Holding into US defeats the purpose of the setup.

WHY PEOPLE MISLABEL THIS SETUP

- Treating a real breakout as a liquidity grab
- Ignoring volume and candle structure
- Entering too late after momentum has already gone
- Expecting this setup to appear every day
- Forcing it when Asia wasn't consolidating

HOW THIS IS USED IN DISCORD

When someone says:

> "This looks like a liquidity grab"

The correct checklist is:

1. Did Asia qualify?
2. Was there a clean stop hunt beyond the range?
3. Did price fail to accept outside the range?
4. Are we still early enough in UK to act?

If not – it's not this setup.
