FL-003: MULTI-SESSION M / W FORMATION (WITHIN THE ASIA RANGE)

What this setup is

The Multi-Session M or W is a reversal setup where the first part of the formation is created during Asia, and the second part completes across the Asia → UK transition, without breaking the Asia High or Low.

- M formation = short bias
- W formation = long bias

The defining feature is that price fails to repeat the Asia extreme, signalling exhaustion and reversal.

WHEN YOU'RE ALLOWED TO LOOK FOR IT (DAY FILTER)

This setup uses the same qualification rules as the other Asia → UK strategies.

✅ Rule 1: Asia range must be under 2%

- Measure Asia High to Asia Low
- < 2% = acceptable
- > 2% = no trade day

✅ Rule 2: Asia must be consolidation

You want:

- sideways price action
- multiple touches of highs and lows
- no clean trend from start to end

Trending Asia reduces the reliability of this setup.

HOW THE FORMATION DEVELOPS

This setup unfolds over more than one session.

For an M formation (short)

1. First peak forms during Asia (near Asia High)
2. Price pulls away into the end of Asia (profit-taking phase)
3. During the UK Gap or early UK, price attempts to revisit the high
4. That attempt fails to break the Asia High
5. Reversal behaviour appears

FOR A W FORMATION (LONG)

Same structure, inverted:

1. First low forms during Asia
2. Price pulls away late Asia
3. UK attempts to revisit the low
4. Fails to break
5. Reversal behaviour appears

The range must remain intact.

WHAT CONFIRMS THE SETUP

You’re looking for failure and rejection, not a breakout.

Common confirmation signals include:

- wicks into the Asia High / Low
- inability to close outside the range
- engulfing candles against the attempted move
- clear rejection at the extreme

If price accepts outside the Asia range, this is not the setup.

THE TRIGGER LOGIC

The trigger occurs after the failed attempt to revisit the Asia extreme.

- Entry is taken once rejection is clear
- This often happens in the first hour of UK
- You do not need to wait for deep continuation

The key is recognising that the second leg of the M/W has failed.

STOP LOSS PLACEMENT

Your stop goes:

- above the first peak in an M formation
- below the first peak in a W formation

The first peak is always the structural reference point.

TARGETING LOGIC

Typical targets include:

- a key high or low from the last 1–2 sessions
- a nearby EMA
- internal Asia range liquidity

This setup often produces larger R multiples than the single-session version when it plays cleanly.

MANDATORY EXIT RULE

Regardless of outcome:

✅ You must be out before the last hour of UK (around 8:00am New York time).

This setup is not designed to run into US volatility.

COMMON MISLABELS

- Confusing this with a liquidity grab

- Trading it when Asia already broke structure
- Entering before rejection is clear
- Ignoring that the Asia range must remain unbroken
- Treating a failed attempt as continuation

HOW THIS SHOWS UP IN DISCORD

When someone says:

> "This could be a multi-session M"

The correct questions are:

1. Did the first peak form in Asia?
2. Did UK fail to repeat that extreme?
3. Did the Asia range remain intact?
4. Are we still early enough in UK?

If not – it's not this setup.
