FL-004: MULTI-SESSION M / W FAKEOUT (ASIA RANGE BREAK & FAILURE)

What this setup is

The Multi-Session M / W Fakeout is a reversal setup where price breaks the Asia range, attracts breakout traders, and then fails to hold outside the range, completing an M or W formation before reversing back through the range.

This is not a continuation breakout.
It is a false expansion followed by rejection.

- Fake break above Asia High → short bias
- Fake break below Asia Low → long bias

WHEN YOU'RE ALLOWED TO LOOK FOR IT (DAY FILTER)

✅ Rule 1: Asia range must be under 2%

- Measure Asia High to Asia Low
- < 2% = acceptable
- > 2% = stand down

✅ Rule 2: Asia must be mostly consolidation

This setup is more fragile than the others.

You want:

- sideways or compressed Asia
- no strong directional trend
- no clean expansion before the fakeout

If Asia already expanded aggressively, fakeouts lose meaning.

HOW THE FAKEOUT FORMS

This setup unfolds across multiple sessions.

For an M fakeout (short setup)

1. A first peak forms during Asia
2. Price pulls away late Asia / early UK
3. During early UK, price attempts the Asia High
4. That attempt fails to hold, completing the M
5. Reversal follows

FOR A W FAKEOUT (LONG SETUP)

The structure is inverted:

1. First low in Asia
2. Pull away
3. Return to Asia low
4. Failure to hold
5. W completes → reversal

The key feature is failure after expansion.

WHAT QUALIFIES AS A VALID FAKEOUT

A valid fakeout usually shows:

- a brief acceptance outside the Asia range
- inability to continue in breakout direction
- wicks or rejection candles near the extreme
- no structural follow-through

If price accepts and builds structure outside the range, this is not a fakeout.

THE TRIGGER LOGIC

The trigger is the failure of the second attempt.

- You are not trading the initial break
- You are trading the failed continuation
- Entry occurs once rejection is clear and momentum shifts

This often appears before 5:00am New York time.

STOP LOSS PLACEMENT

Your stop goes:

- above the first peak in an M fakeout
- below the first peak in a W fakeout

The first peak remains the structural anchor – not the breakout wick.

TARGETING LOGIC

Common targets include:

- the opposite side of the Asia range
- a nearby EMA
- a recent key level from the last 1–2 sessions
- internal range liquidity

This setup often delivers larger R multiples than standard Asia-range trades when it plays cleanly.

MANDATORY EXIT RULE

Regardless of outcome:

✅ You must be out before the last hour of UK (around 8:00am New York time).

This setup is not designed to transition into US.

WHY PEOPLE MISLABEL THIS SETUP

- Treating the initial break as the trade
- Confusing it with a Liquidity Grab
- Ignoring that a second failure is required
- Trading it when Asia already trended
- Holding into US expecting continuation

HOW THIS SHOWS UP IN DISCORD

When someone says:

> "This might be a fakeout M"

The correct checklist is:

1. Did Asia qualify?
2. Was there a real break of the range?
3. Did price fail to continue after the break?
4. Did the second attempt fail?
5. Are we still early enough in UK?

If not – it's not this setup.
